

Health Care Transition Resources for Youth with Disabilities

1. Got Transition: a website explaining what health care transition is and how to successfully make it through the process. On the site, the transition process is divided into six steps, and has answers for questions common to each step. There is also a quiz you can take to see if you are ready for the transition, and after taking it, there will be a set of tools and resources that are helpful to keep you going in the right direction. http://www.gottransition.org/
2. Family Center for Children and Youth with Special Health Care Needs (Family Center): the statewide parent-directed center within Children's Special Health Care Services and the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services. The primary role of the Family Center is to offer emotional support, information, and connections to resources for families of children and youth with special health care needs. The Family Center also has newsletters on developments in the healthcare field, parent-to-parent support, conference and camp scholarship information, and peer-to-peer support to parents/caregivers and youth in transition. www.michigan.gov/familycenter
3. Children's Special Health Care Services (CSHCS): a part of the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services. CSHCS has resources on the transition to adulthood, including a guidebook for planning the transition and an assessment that helps determine what you still need to work on as a part of the transition. There are 45 CSHCS local health departments across Michigan that can assist families and youth in transition. www.michigan.gov/cshcs
4. Epilepsy Foundation of Michigan: the Epilepsy Foundation of MI has extensive information regarding all aspects of life with epilepsy, including careers and college, driving, day-to-day tips, and frequently asked questions. The organization also has online forums for asking questions and awareness programs available for you and family members. https://www.epilepsy.com/learn/age-groups/youth
5. Michigan Alliance for Families: this website explores many parts of the transition to adulthood, including agencies and organizations that can be helpful, career resources, and information on being a self-advocate. The topics presented are helpful for all family members. They also holds webinars and trainings specific to the transition to adulthood. http://www.michiganallianceforfamilies.org/transition/

6. About Kids Health: a website covering many of the changes associated with transitioning to adulthood with epilepsy. Information about health care transition, driving, secondary education, and reproductive health. Each page contains key points, answers to important questions, and suggestions for both youth and parents. https://www.aboutkidshealth.ca/
7. Michigan Transition Services Association: an organization to assist youth with disabilities in making the move from school onward. Every year they host a conference in Michigan on successful transitions with presentations and speakers on different transition-related topics. There is also a blog with events and opportunities. https://www.michigantsa.com/
8. Michigan Education and Training Voucher: this website is for youth in transition and contains a large number of resources on paying for college education such as scholarships, financial aid services, and financial aid situations at specific colleges. Financial aid can be confusing. Having this information available in one place is very beneficial and makes it easier to learn more about different options. https://mietv.samaritas.org/resources.aspx
9. Center for Parent Information and Resources: this organization's website has a wide range of transition resources including those geared to youth and parents. There is a main transition to adulthood page that contains information on planning high school transition, such as what careers and activities to consider. Other information, resources, and connections are available as well. https://www.parentcenterhub.org/transition-starters/
10. ABLE National Resources Center: ABLE accounts are savings accounts for any expenses related to your disability, such as transportation or housing costs, without affecting eligibility for public benefits like Medicaid and supplemental security insurance. The resources center has extensive information about ABLE accounts, including eligibility, how to get started, and managing the accounts. http://ablenrc.org/

11. National Resource Center for Supported Decision-Making: the resource center has pages and documents focused on many aspects of transition, including how to make beneficial plans and various types of education transition. There are also videos and stories of other people's success in their transitions. http://www.supporteddecisionmaking.org/content/resource-library	National Resource Center For Supported Decision Making EVERYONE has the Right To Make Choices
12. Transition Toolkit for Youth with Disabilities: run by the Vermont Family Network, this page has information on a wide range of the topics related to transitions for both you and your family members. The various options available after completing high school are discussed as well as transition planning. There is also a section on laws associated with transitions. http://www.vermontfamilynetwork.org/services/transition/transition-to-adulthood-toolkit
13. Child Neurology Foundation: the neurology foundation has information about the transition to an adult neurologist from pediatrics through its Transition of Care program, which includes videos and links to tools for you, your parents, and your doctors. Also, there are stories from other youth with epilepsy related to their transitions. https://www.childneurologyfoundation.org/transitions/
14. American Epilepsy Society: the transition tools for adolescents page contains resources for parents and you on what your doctors should be discussing and focusing on during the long-term process of transition. Information is available on how to be well-prepared to discuss appropriate topics with your doctors to make the transition easier. https://www.aesnet.org/clinical_resources/practice_tools/transition_tools_adolescents
